Adelaide, Nov 20: Several COVID drugs are in the pipeline for 2022, some you can potentially take at home, others for use in hospital. It's taken almost two years of the pandemic to get here. However, as we argue in our paper, with more and larger collaborations, and focusing on repurposing the right drugs, we could have developed effective COVID drugs at scale, earlier.

We can expect more COVID drugs next year, but we've wasted ...

A central issue is the provision of support to developing countries, especially in relation to the goal of mobilizing $100 billion annually by 2020. Financial support is crucial for all elements of the climate change regime, including mitigation, but also in terms of adaptation, capacity-building, technology transfer and several other elements.
